

MORNING APPEAL.

Thursday, June 7, 1888.

A FREE TRADE ORGAN WEAKENS.

During the past few months the San Francisco Examiner, an open free trade organ, has been gradually receding from its free trade position and has now fallen in line for protection.

It does not fall upon the stage with the tremendous emphasis which characterized the fall of the lamented "Kirby" when he used to die each night at the Bottery theatre, but instead the paper glides gracefully, to the floor in a manner which attracts the least possible attention. It strikes the floor all the same however.

It says in its issue of May 4 "We may also congratulate ourselves upon the restoration of plums and prunes to the dutiable list. As long as tariff legislation is treated as a scramble of special interests for advantages, our local interests may as well get their share."

The Examiner then proceeds to argue that it would be an excellent idea if "the duties on plums and prunes could be balanced against those on coal and iron and all swept away together."

The idea of pitting the infant industry of plums and prune raising of California against the coal and iron industry of Pennsylvania would cause a broad smile to play over the faces of people who make their living in Pittsburg.

Such a compromise calls to mind the remark of the ferryman who was proffered three cents by Jim Fisk to cross a small stream in New Jersey.

"Keep your money Jim, I may want to travel on the Erie road some day and us transportation chaps ought to exchange courtesies."

It is idle anywhere in America to talk of free trade. It is simply a ridiculous theory which impracticable people advocate and newspaper editors battle for who are proud of undertaking uphill arguments and spinning webs of fine logic simply for the innocent pastime it affords them.

The California editor who argues for free trade happens to know a number of people in the prune and plum industry and they inform him that they will be wiped out in business if free trade ideas prevail.

He at once wants plums and prunes protected by a high tariff but he is indifferent to the needs of the coal and iron industry.

The Pennsylvania editor looks after that however. At the same time the Michigan free trade editor is in favor of no tariff on wool and coal, but for the sake of his Michigan constituency he insists that lumber shall still be protected and so it goes all over the Union.

The protection writers who realize that there are other States in the Union besides their own and are not governed by any sectional bias, lump the whole question and advocate protection for all doing at one stroke just exactly what the various free trade writers in different parts of the Union are advocating piecemeal.

The Examiner has fallen in line on plums and prunes and if it continues to investigate the question it will presently fall in line and want protection for the wool and lumber in California.

There is still hope that protection sanity will yet strike the Examiner.

OREGON REPUBLICAN.

Oregon was a State, on which the Democrats confidently counted this year.

Yesterday the news came that it had gone Republican by a handsome majority. It is easy to account for the result in the web-foot State.

The Democrats sent free trade speakers up there, the ablest they could find to preach the doctrine of free trade and Cobden Clubism to the intelligent home producers of the country.

The people resisted this attempt to wheedle them into fighting their own interest, and thus the State takes its place in the Republican column where every State belongs which manufactures its own goods and raises its own produce.

Oregon is the opening gun of the fight between free trade and protection. Oregon has fired its first gun for protection by 4900 majority being a heavy gain over last year.

The powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight adulterated powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 100 Wall St. N. Y.
